

Europe should focus on energy projects which will ensure diversity and independence and Croatia can have its role as a part of the energy solution for the region with floating LNG terminal, coordinator for international energy affairs at the American State Department, Amos Hochstein, said.

- I think Europe and countries in Europe should focus on projects which will ensure their own future, own diversification, independence, not on projects which continue their dependency on one source and lead to the condition of vulnerability and their national security- Hochstein said.

He specifically outlined that Croatia could have its role as a part of energy solution for the region there.

source: ekapija.com