

Member states have set a concrete goal to switch to more renewables in energy production, but not every country is moving at the same pace. So far, the energy transition has had little impact on overall CO2 emissions.

Source: dw